

I have no problem with helicopters flying at any altitude if they are involved in a rescue operation or doing State or County work to maintain our land.

Let's keep commercial helicopters to 1500 feet and above. Why should their noise be allowed to affect the general population and the wilderness animals just so that someone can make a buck? Let's not put the special needs of a few commercial ventures above the general population. Bike tours clog the streets I drive on, horse tours wreck sliding sands trail in Haleakala and the tour vans hog the road out to Hana. The general population counts too, and we want to enjoy our islands without helicopter noise pollution. Thank-you.
